 "It being necessary to blow up the Kashmere Gate in order that the attacking force might effect an entrance into the City, this desperate duty was performed by Lieutenants Home and Salkeld of the Engineers, Sergeants Smith and CARMICHAEL and Corporal Burgess of the Sappers and Miners, and Bugler Hawthorne of the 52nd Foot."

"Sergt. Carmichael and Corpl. Burgess were killed on the spot; Salkeld, Home, Smith and Hawthorne were recommended by General Wilson for the V.C., but Salkeld succumbed in a few days to the severe wounds he had received. Home met his death shortly afterwards. Smith and Hawthorne alone survived to receive the honours they had so nobly earned."

"Lieutenant Home after laying his bags had time to jump into the ditch unhurt. Lieutenant Salkeld also laid his bags, but was almost immediately shot through the arm and leg and fell back disabled on the bridge.

"He handed the portfire to Corporal Burgess, bidding him to light the fusee. Burgess, trying to obey, was shot dead.

"Sergeant Carmichael then seized the portfire, lighted the fusee, but immediately fell mortally wounded. The other, Sergeant Smith, thinking that Carmichael had failed, rushed forward to seize the portfire, but noticing the fusee burning threw himself into the ditch.

"The next moment the massive gate was shattered with a tremendous explosion.

"Home at once ordered Hawthorne to sound the bugle call."—History of the Indiam Mutiny, 1857–1858. By Colonel G. B. Malleson, C.S.I. (Vol. II., Pages 32–37).

Fraser, consisting of Nos. 1 and 3 Armed Constabulary and Hoteres Ngatiporous. The extreme right, on a scarped strong ride, was commanded from the enemy's rifle pits and works, and a lodgment was only effected by cutting out standing-room with a pickaxe. The enemy made several determined sorties against this point, and it became extremely difficult to maintain the position, which was essential to the success of the operations. A party of twelve volunteers were at length placed there, and they succeeded with some loss in holding the position to the end of the siege and in repelling severa' resolute attacks. The most conspicuous for their bravery were Constables Black and Biddle.

Rowland Viscount Hill, born at Prees Hall, Shropshire, on August 11th, 1772, was the son of Sir John Hill, Bart., of Hawkston. He studied at the Military School at Strasburg whilst subaltern, and was aide-de-camp at Toulon in 1793. He commanded the 90th Regiment in Abercromby's Egyptian Expedition in 1801, and was wounded at Abonkir.

An officer under his command at Fermoy, in Ireland, describes him as "a very pleasant, mild man, and much liked."

During the Peninsula War, Hill was Wellington's most trusted General and was constantly employed by him in positions of independent command. Amongst some of his many important achievements, General Hill distinguished himself in command of the Second Division at Talavera. It was at this battle, when the French under Regnier were temporarily successful in an attack upon the key of the British position, that Hill brought up the Twenty-ninth Regiment, which, charging home, drove the enemy from the bluff that they had captured.

On the bloodstained hill of Busaco, the General was in command of the right, and defeated Regnier's attack. He was invalided after the campaign of 1810, but resumed his command the next year, and defeated Gerard at Merida, in October.

Wellington's offensive campaign of 1812 was brilliantly commenced by Hill's surprise and defeat of the French at Almaraz. At this time he was commanding the army on the Tagus, and this victory was important, as it broke the French lines of communication between Seville and Madrid.

At Vittoria he directed the attack on the French left, and throughout the strenuous fighting against Soult's army in the Pyrenees, with Hope and Beresford, Hill took his full share of the successes of Wellington's army, afterwards winning the victories of Bayonne and Toulouse. At Waterloo, Lord Hill headed the Brigade (Adams) which swept the Old Guard from the field, and was second in command of the Army of Occupation in France, 1815–1818.

For his services Hill was made K.B. in 1812 and Baron Hill in 1814.

He succeeded Wellington as Commander-in-Chief in 1828, and when he resigned in 1842, was created Viscount. He died on December 10th, 1842.
